EMC University is delighted to make available to all our employees educational materials from the Harvard Business School (“HBS”). Now, each of us can access Harvard Business Review (“HBR”) reprints, HBS cases and teaching notes, and an extensive library of short videos with teaching instructions, for our own use. This is truly giving us the means to define our own development!

1. Harvard Business Review is best known for its flagship bimonthly magazine sought after by executives and business leaders who learn from world-class researchers and business practitioners. In recent years HBR has expanded its offerings to include books, digital content and tools published on HBR.org.

2. THE HBR Channel, a recent offering out of HBS, offers brief, high quality videos that combine trusted leadership development content from Harvard Business Publishing with detailed learning guides that help managers solve their toughest business challenges. The HBR Channel videos feature insights from a broad range of experts:

- Thought leaders, including highly respected academics, authors, and bloggers.
- Consultants, with proven expertise in a spectrum of disciplines.
- Practitioners, including managers, executives, and CEOs with real-world experience from a variety of prominent companies and industries. Learn from the best out there!

3. The Harvard Business Publishing Archive gives EMC employees access to thousands of articles and case studies in a multitude of disciplines, including Management, Strategy, Marketing and IT. Many of these are used as part of HBS’s world-class MBA curriculum; you can use them as part of a management meeting or conference, or as interesting reading for your own development.

NOTE: These materials are under copyright, and strict adherence to copyright policies must be followed at all times. Importantly, you cannot make copies of your original download for colleagues or classmates. It is illegal to do so.
